New York, NY – March 27, 2014 – - Jay Black, SL Green Realty Corp's (NYSE: SLG) Director of Sustainability, was a speaker and panelist in two separate sessions at the Eco Products International Fair, one of Asia's most prestigious annual forums for sustainability, held this year, March 13-15, in Taiwan.

Sponsored by the Asian Productivity Organization (APO), in conjunction with the Taiwan Green Trade Project Office (GTPO), Mr. Black presented as a key event speaker, addressing SL Green's market leading environmental program. Highlighting its energy, water, and waste initiatives throughout its commercial office portfolio in New York City and Westchester/Connecticut, Mr. Black provided insight for attendees on the growing role of sustainability for SL Green and the New York City real estate market. Additionally, he outlined its participation within specific initiatives by the City of New York, including "plaNYC" local laws to address energy efficiency.

Simultaneously Mr. Black gained an understanding of the complex sustainable challenges facing Asian countries today.

"In addition to addressing concerns similar to those in the US, including energy efficiency, water conservation and improvement in recycling standards, they are also dealing with issues such as air quality and access to clean water. Recent support by regional governments, and a renewed effort by environmental organizations and not-for-profit groups, are combining with large business enterprises, seeking to improve environmental standards,” noted Mr. Black who added that participation by SL Green furthers the REIT’s knowledge and best practices, while proactively helping build SL Green’s relationship with the international community through environmental awareness.”
