SL GREEN PARTNERS IN CITY MENTORSHIP PROGRAM

New York, NY – January 12, 2017 – SL Green is proud to announce its participation in the New York City Mentoring Program. SLG is one of twenty companies committed as a campaign partner.

In part of a citywide effort to increase and promote the value of mentorship for high school youth, the de Blasio administration launched the ‘Good for Me. Good for My City.’ initiative with a goal to engage 40,000 high school students in mentoring experiences annually by 2022. This program is aligned with the broader goals outlined in the City’s ‘Equity and Excellence’ plan, which aims to achieve an 80% high school graduation rate among the City’s students by 2026.

“SL Green is a proud partner in the ‘Good for Me. Good for My City.’ initiative to champion mentorship, as well as employee volunteer engagement,” said Marc Holliday, Chief Executive Officer of SL Green. “As New York City’s largest commercial landlord, we are excited to share our knowledge and management expertise to inspire the City’s future workforce.”

In addition to the aforementioned partnership, SL Green maintains a robust corporate social responsibility program. Over the past decade the Company has collaborated with charities to utilize SL Green's portfolio of properties as centers to donate blood, school supplies, food, toys, coats, and sporting equipment. SLG also celebrated Earth Week 2016 by beautifying local communities in New York City, Westchester, and Connecticut through park cleanups.

In 2017, the Company will focus on educating tenants on the updates to NYC's recycling legislation, as well as maintain lobby donation drives and park cleanup events.

More information on SLG's corporate social responsibility program can be found in the Company's 2016 sustainability report and website, accessible here: slgreen.com/sustainability.
